Blackjack, which used to be known as Vingt-et-un and then Twenty-one, was first played in Europe at the start of the 18th century and was an instant hit in France.

Introduced in the United States at the beginning of the 19th century, blackjack is currently considered one of the world's most popular casino games.

Object of the game

How to play

Card values

Aces count as 1 or 11, face cards count as 10 and all other cards are counted at face value. A blackjack occurs when the first two cards of a hand are an Ace and a 10 or a face card, i.e. a two-card hand with a total value of 21, which is the highest possible score at blackjack.

The deal

Cards are dealt from an electronic shoe. Each player receives two cards face up, and the House also receives two cards, one face up and one face down.

The House strategy

Once players have played their hand, the House reveals its face-down card. The House then completes its hand, as necessary, according to the House strategy indicated at the table:

- Hit on a count of soft 17 or less and stand on hard 17 or more.
- Hit on a count of 16 or less and stand on all 17 hard or more.

Soft hand

Hand in which an Ace may have the value of either 1 or 11 without the total value of the hand exceeding 21

Example: A hand made up of an Ace and a 6 for a total value of 7 or 17

Hard hand

Hand with no Aces or one in which Aces only have the value of 1

Example: A hand made up of a 10, a 6 and an Ace for a total value of 17

Your bet wins if:

- > The total value of your hand is 21 or less and is greater than the House's hand.
- > The total value of your hand is 21 or less and the House's hand is over 21.
- > Your hand is a blackjack while the total value of the House's hand is 21, with three cards or more.

If your hand is a blackjack, your bet pays 3 to 2, provided that the House's hand is not also a blackjack. If it is, there is a tie. Any other winning bet pays even money.

When there is a tie, neither player wins nor loses, and you may take back your bet.

NOTE:

- > If your hand exceeds 21, you lose your bet.

This leaflet provides a summary of the main rules of electronic blackjack. For complete information and rules, see the rules in effect at the blackjack table. In the event of a discrepancy between the information in this leaflet and the rules displayed on the table, the latter will prevail.

Players' options

Based on the total of your first two cards and the value of the House's face-up card, you have the following options:

- Hit, i.e. draw one or several additional cards to improve your hand without going over 21.
- Stand, if you are satisfied with your hand.
- Split a pair, i.e. two cards of the same value, up to a maximum of four hands. Each hand is then played separately. Aces may be split only once and you are entitled to receive only one additional card for each hand. When splitting a hand, you must wager an additional amount equal to your original bet. There is no blackjack on split pairs.
- Double down, i.e. wager an additional amount equal to your original bet after the first two cards are dealt, except if the two cards dealt total 21. You may also double down after splitting a pair, except in the case of a pair of Aces. In all cases, you may only receive a single additional card after doubling down.
- Take insurance, if the House's face-up card is an Ace. In this case, you may wager on the insurance line a sum equal to one half of your original bet. If the House draws a blackjack, the insurance bet pays 2 to 1. If the House fails to draw a blackjack, you lose your insurance bet.
